

Welcome to Wake Forest University!

You have been awarded a Federal Work-Study position as part of your financial aid package. Federal Work-Study is a federally subsidized work program that enables students to earn money from a part-time job while in school. The purpose of this program is to reduce the total indebtedness students accrue from loans over four years of university study. Most students that participate in this program work approximately 10 hours per week with an average pay rate of $6.50 per hour. Studies have shown that students in the Work-Study program are not hindered by work time, but actually excel academically due to better structuring of their day with scheduled times for classes, study, and work.

The total dollar amount of your Federal Work-Study award dictates the amount of money you may earn for the academic year. Students are paid monthly for actual hours worked; therefore, this portion of the financial aid package is not subtracted from the total bill. Students are not required to work the entire amount awarded, however, they need to commit to a set schedule with their supervisor at the beginning of the year so that departments are aware of how many hours on which they can depend for assistance per week.

Most positions are located on campus in academic or administrative departments. There are, however, special opportunities to work in Community Service, America Reads, and Wake Forest School of Medicine. These options offer a great experience, community involvement, resume building, and higher pay rates. Community Service positions involve working in the community in non-profit agencies such as the American Red Cross, Hospice, Big Brother/Big Sister and the Ronald McDonald House. America Reads is a program that allows students the opportunity to tutor elementary students in reading and math. Wake Forest University School of Medicine is our very own medical school that is located a short distance from campus. These positions are limited and involve laboratory responsibilities and possible research opportunities. All of these programs require your own transportation but pay an average rate of $7.50-$8.00 per hour to allow for transportation expenses.
